CLASSROOM CORNER

Press On

Mrs. Delp/Second Grade

With the end of the second marking period in sight we can claim that the year is halfway over. Wow, that flew by! We have been learning and relearning what makes a good student. We all want to do well, but some are not willing to put the work into what it takes.

We may have made mistakes, but we have the rest of this year to make changes and learn from our mistakes. I have been reading in a book titled "Forward" by David Jeremiah, that there is a reason why the rearview mirror is small. We don't need to keep looking behind us at the past and wish for better days-make each day count now, and we don't need to keep reliving our mistakes and hitting ourselves over the head. Make those changes, get help, pray, and take the steps needed to improve. Our class returned and did a New Years resolution. Some are so cute and I laughed at a few, but each one said they wanted to improve. So we are continuing to press on and make changes.

We also returned to a "Snow Day" in which we learned about snowflakes, did an experiment on hot and cold, made Olafs, decorated cookies showing symmetry as is shown in snowflakes, learned about Snowflake Bentley, and learned to cut out snowflakes and the water cycle that creates them.

Second grade has finished lower case cursive and we are now starting capital letters. We are also working with 3-digit subtraction and addition. Our reading vocabulary tree has grown as we learn many new words. We are learning about the government, local, state, and national, and what makes a good leader. The students are learning about forces and simple machines in science and in Bible class we are looking at the miracles of Christ.

We have a lot more to do with projects and experiments, tests, and assignments. We are pressing on and improving!
